

The Leadership Voice Template

Leadership is Everyone's Business

Five levels to Mastery

You may be surprised to hear this, but in the majority of our training sessions around Australia and New Zealand, many managers tell us they've never had any training on how to better lead their teams.

Managing others is mostly a learnt skill, yet organisations set their managers up for failure when they don't make time for learning so-called 'soft' skills. Far from being 'soft', inter-personal skills are the hardest skills to learn and we call them Foundation Skills, because without them your organisation will come tumbling down.

That is exactly what the Leadership Voice Template is all about, setting your managers up for success by building resilience, vital for the strong and successful foundation of every organisation.

A project manager of 23 years recently told us it did not matter what tips and techniques or latest, greatest and 'up to the minute' software he had, if he did not have the most important thing –inter-personal skills– he would not've been as successful in his role.

If your managers and teams are not aware of why they respond the way they do to certain situations, of why they 'lose their cool' they will live life surfing an emotional wave, bouncing up and down at the whim of others.

If your managers and teams think others are difficult, if they do not grasp the subtle language of non-verbal communication and have no concrete strategies to help them through the demands of everyday life in the workplace, then your organisation will never be as successful as it could be ... it's that simple.
